CHES5124 Housing and Urban Governance in Contemporary China

2019-20, Term 1, Tuesdays 6:30pm – 9:15pm
WMYS04 (Wu Ho Man Yuen Building)

Instructor: Dr. Jackson Yeh (jackonyeh@cuhk.edu.hk)
Teaching Assistant: Ms. Mavis Siu (mavissiu@cuhk.edu.hk)

Course Description
This course looks at the transformation of housing and urban governance in contemporary China. The class will first introduce various perspectives to understand the role and importance of housing in general. It will then acquaint students with some basic skills on policy analysis and evaluation. The following lectures will look at the Chinese context and investigate the structural change of housing system and its impacts on the Chinese society. Subsequently the course covers a number of current housing policy issues in China, such as development of affordable housing, real estate fever, protection of private property, as well as housing management. Particular attention is paid to the interplay between changes in the housing sector and broader socio-political developments in contemporary China.

Learning Outcomes
Upon successful completion of this course, students should be able to:
1) understand the historical process of housing privatization in China since 1979;
2) grasp how transformations in the housing sector have triggered other changes in urban livelihood;
3) critically analyse current housing and urban governance issues in China.

Learning Activities
Lectures and tutorials will be held every week. During the tutorials, students will form small groups and engage in group presentation. Attendance of lectures and tutorials is required.

Assessment (More details will be provided in class)
I. Class participation (10%)
II. Group presentation (30%)

Each group should choose a housing-related issue that may happen in an urban neighborhood in mainland China and do a presentation of around 30 minutes to the class. The assessment of your performance will be based on (1) the quality of your PowerPoint (10%); (2) the individual presentation skill (15%); and finally (3) the performance in the Q & A session (5%).

III. Mid-Term Test (20%): MCQ (10%) + Short Question (10%) (Lecture 9, 5 November)

IV. Final Individual Essay (40%)

Students are encouraged to write up a Final Individual Essay based on the work they have done in the group presentation. The Final Individual Essay should follow the basic requirements of an academic essay and contain about 3,000 words (excluding footnotes and reference list). Students are also suggested to consult the instructor if they encounter any problems. The deadline for submission will be announced later and no late submission is allowed.

The Final Individual Essay will be evaluated on the basis of: 1) Content (40%): coherence and precision of the argument; 2) Organization (40%): structure and clarity of writing; and finally, 3) References (20%): relevance of evidence gathered to support this assignment. Please note that lecture notes and Wikipedia are not suitable as sources for academic writing (although they may serve as a starting point for your research). You should resort to original academic references (journal articles, book chapters, and so on), and reliable official statistics.
